

Rise of the Unicorns

I am always moved when I come across a unique one in a galaxy of characters who cannot be imitated. Among the waves of internal energies, I can easily find those that do not require effort and seem to be there by themselves. However, I have to really look to find a carved character, and even then I have to know what I'm looking for.

The autonomy of thinking, the flexibility of creative response to unpleasantness and the mysteriousness in which I never know what I am at, are among the outstanding virtues of the originals, which I call Unicorns. They have long been a rarity and easily overlooked because they don't attract attention. They like to be alone, not because they want to avoid others, but because they find strength and peace only in their own, carefully nurtured space. They spend the day as if they don't have a care in the world, passionately engrossed in some activity. They are lone beacons of authenticity amidst the impenetrable fog of plagiarism.

Unicorns find strength in deep repose and long solitudes. They avoid crowds, you can find them in the back rows, from where they can observe the Happening undisturbed. Their unsociability is not intentional. At first, many Unicorns suffer an exclusion they did not choose, but later it becomes a silent influence that attracts imitation. Unicorns know the beauty of silence and are adept readers of the inner compass, which they faithfully follow. Independence of thought, moral courage and freedom from unhealthy emotions place them at the very top of spiritual giants.

In the forest, each tree embodies its own energy, which gives it character (See Characters of trees). One are tall and imposing, they immediately catch your eye because they dominate the landscape. Others support them with dense undergrowth, they are indispensable but easily overlooked. While you find the Unicorn tree among the soft shadows of the serenity of the forest, special and unique, with deep and strong roots that keep the balance in every storm. It remains invisible to those who observe superficially or from afar.

Unicorns' unique skill of introspection skills, spontaneous thoughts, and emotional stability make them fascinating and rare examples among today's characters. Although, due to their unruliness, they were long regarded as thorn in the heels to be pulled out, today we prefer to leave them in the heel to tease us to surpass ourselves. Despite giving the impression of Himalayan recluses, Unicorns are the ones who will be the first to notice a change in you, even the slightest shade of mood.

The unicorn's loyalty to one's inner truth is the horn that pierces the insensitivity of rationalism and precedes humanity to lead it into the Splendor of Naturness. Let's look at some of Unicorn's most distinctive character traits.

Protection of personal space

The protection of spiritual and physical intimacy is a value that the Unicorn cannot give up. It is purity of spirit and solitude that build him. He protects them carefully and lovingly, not out of pride or threat, but out of a deep understanding of value and the capabilities they bring. For him, they are prana food, without which he would dry up spiritually. The unicorn is steadfast precisely because of the certainty that arises in the inner silence, let it be in the midst of the drama of the world. He will remain untouched by the tumult of others, and their mud will not stain the hem of his garment. The Unicorn sails through everyday life like a river, rich with this and that which Life throws at him and imperceptibly puts aside where the opportunity presents itself, not attached to these gains or losses. This significance does not mean that the Unicorn refuses help or comfort, on the contrary, it deeply values meaningful and authentic relationships, and avoids the cowardice of profiteering like an animal from the traps of hunters.

He expresses himself skillfully, careful not to allow his own borders to be crossed or to cross those of others himself. He navigates the world with noticeable Clarity, where he can let others in or enter himself. Respect for personal space and free will is the jewel of the Unicorn's character. Trespassing his own boundaries, he is charmingly assertive on the first ball and clears himself up as he goes along, without repeating the disrespect he has to guard himself against and telling others how to think or behave. 'I can't do that' or 'I don't like this behavior' keeps him in the permitted area, while with the words 'don't do that' or 'you can't do that', he would cross over into someone else's space. He remembers that he must give respect in order to receive it.

Openness

The unicorn has the annoying quality of not being able to lie, even to save his life. Truth-loving to the last fiber, he often falls into awkward situations, which he endlessly prefers to endure than to take covert maneuvers to achieve what he wants. He's refreshingly candid and charming even when he's scolding you. His pain at your fall is downright touching. Emotional maturity and a certain balance between self-expression and the sensitivity of others can be discerned from his speech. He knows the power of words, so he carefully regulates them so that he does not deviate from the values and consequences he wants to reap. Openness isn't just about expressing yourself, it's about creating healthy boundaries for fruitful relationships based on trust and authenticity.

Flexibility

The unicorn feels good in the unknown, the routine reminds him of the spiritual inflexibility in which he is stuck. His ability to conquer the unknown does not negate the values to which he remains faithful, but instead absorbs newness in such a way that it expands the inner space into ever-increasing harmony with the Will of Life. This makes him flexible in unexpected situations, to which he responds as if he had been preparing for them all his life. His creative spontaneity is not luck or inherited talent, but the fruit of an open mind, the will to expand, the cultivation of inner stability and trust in the flawless Order of Life.

A leader without leadership

The unicorn is the example you want to follow. His inner solidity is contagious, and his straightforwardness is certainly attractive if that's your thing, otherwise, of course, it bothers you like a light on in a den of unseemly secrets. The unicorn inspires with a characteristic aroma that rises from inner purity. Quite unlike those leaders who rely on position and power to assert their superiority over the weaker, the Unicorn inspires with compassion, understanding and genuine advocacy for the other's position to take courage and live the best of what they have.

Mysteriousness

We meet daily about the dark side of technology and it seems that we can say goodbye to discretion and Peace. For the Unicorn, these are valuables that he cannot afford to lose. With phones always exposed and on the line, for intrusions from the outside, the Unicorn deals with undeniable sharpness with people who do not value intimacy, elegantly without being internally agitated. The mysteriousness of the Unicorn not only protects against the loss of the creative Peace, it is also a strategy for choosing the words spoken and how he is experienced by others. People find his serenity pleasant and like to bathe in the calm confidence he exudes.

Silence can also be a reason for them to ask questions and want to know more about things that the Unicorn does not want to reveal. Then they feel the power behind the penetrating gaze and the enigmatic smile with which he silently answers their inquiries. A unicorn opens his heart to those who respect his personal space, time and freedom and are purely present, without hidden intentions. There isn't no 'hero' who can fool the Unicorn. Decades of cultivating the garden of the soul have made him a master of recognizing all the subtleties of the mind.

He doesn't like do-gooders

Instead of engaging in mundane conversations that revolve around judgments, intrigues, past dramas and events, the Unicorn allows itself to be lured only into conversations that expand understanding, encourage, support, or otherwise uplift the spirit. Otherwise, he sticks to the logistical minimum and remains faithfully silent. In conversations, he tends to the depth of thought, meaningfulness and content of the words spoken.

This characteristic of the Unicorn is a sign of maturity and awareness of the power of thought and words, and that only through regular silencing can he control them. A Unicorn does not get caught in the useless grinding of thoughts even when he is alone. For him, power plays are a door he does not open. There is no greater discrepancy with his principles than fruitless talk. This prominence is the Unicorn's soil from which dignity and uprightness grow.

Independence

A Unicorn is a self-walker, driven by inner guidance. He prefers to stay in an environment that allows him self-expression and creative freedom. The Unicorn's independence is not defiance of external authority, but a survival necessity to create his own reality. His business and private relationships are finely calibrated between intimacy, independence and respect for the uniqueness of those present. You won't find a Unicorn in the hunt for trends, fads, promotions, sales and other cheapness. He has a distinctive style that has no comparison without attracting attention. His uniqueness can be read from the naturalness he exudes, from the activities he chooses and the goals he supports.

Don't judge

A Unicorn takes a logical and mature attitude towards the behavior of others. He realized that people's behavior is dictated by factors he doesn't know, so he has a higher tolerance and empathizes with others more easily. He sees beyond the obvious into layers that lie beneath the surface and influence people's actions of which they themselves know nothing. He knows that everyone is fighting their own battle with demons that they will face when they are ready. It leaves the pace of their maturation intact.

A unicorn keeps to himself and only makes sure that it doesn't get caught up in judging others. Due to his non-judgmental attitude, he is often a haven for wounded souls who feel accepted by him. This attitude is the fertilizer of the Unicorn's expansion, it places him behind the scenes of what is happening, which hinders their actions and increases the active Love. The non-judgmental attitude also protects the Unicorn from his own emotional abysses.

Upright in hard trials

If you can find a person who is not interested in anything of this world, while at the same time not missing the smallest detail in it, then it is a Unicorn. A detached presence, reminiscent of a napping cat, is the Unicorn's shield against the virtual reality of the world. For him, hardships and trials are not unnecessary things that he would like to avoid, they are opportunities to realize the principles behind which he stands. He does not imagine that the path of growth is strewn with flowers, but he can leave flowers behind even when he walks on thorns. He knows that he attracts trials to himself, just hard enough that he couldn't take them lightly, yet not too hard that he couldn't pass them victoriously.

Calmness in the midst of turmoil is not coldness, apathy or insensitivity, but a nurtured detachment in the Awareness that outside Him everything is transitory, but he remains still in the depths of the self, which does not pass away. The Unicorn feels sadness, many things hurt him, but he does not look for the culprits in the pain. He accepts it without protest as a station on the rise of his prosperity. He knows that he is not defined by pain, but by his attitude towards it.

This is not just a survival attitude, it is a choice for the fullness and meaning of Life. Difficult trials are opportunities to show what kind of material he is made of, and allow others to fall. His victory lies in his detachment from the drama of the Happening and in his unwavering nurturing of soul's garden Grace.

* * * * *

ForestLover